Brazil has reacted very well to the 2008 crisis with the help of expansionary fiscal, monetary and exchange rate policies. However, the solely reliance on such expansionary policies, much beyond the countercyclical temporary requirements, created inflation, fiscal and current account problems without achieving higher growth rates.